

Cast Lead Bullets / Hard Cast lead Bullets / Gas Checks

Soft Cast Bullets

Some bullets require casting with pure soft lead—example: black powder bullets. For these bullets, I use a pure 100% lead, and, if necessary and where required, add an amount of tin necessary to facilitate forming in the mold.

Hard Cast Bullets

Most cast lead bullets are cast using what is known in the industry as a “Lyman #2 Alloy”. This alloy is made by combining 90% pure lead., 5% tin and 5% anti-mony. This gives the bullet a hardness rating of approximately 14-15 BHN (Brinell Hardness Number).

For higher pressure/velocity handgun bullets, and rifle bullets, the hardness of the lead is increased to a 17-18 BHN.

Bullets may also be cast in a hardness range of 8-13 depending upon the bullet and the average loads for that round.

Gas Checks

Gas checks are made of copper, aluminum, zinc and sometimes brass. High pressures, such as those associated with maximum loads in magnum handgun cartridges or in rifle cartridges, coupled with cast lead bullets, can lead to leading in the barrel.

A gas check provides a thin but malleable layer of metal at the base of the lead bullet which provides a seal to the rifling in the barrel, and can eliminate leading.

Remember - You can never have too much ammo!
